Synopsis

A young girl and her grandmother celebrate their home and relationship in this magical story. Winner of the Parents' Choice Award! Come join Rosalba and her grandmother, her abuela, on a magical journey as they fly over the streets, sights, and people of New York City which sparkles below. The story is narrated in English, and sprinkled with Spanish phrases as Abuela points out places that they explore together. The exhilaration in Rosalba's and Abuela's story is magnified by the loving bond that only a grandmother and granddaughter can share. ## Customer Reviews

It's hard to resist the charms of a picture book filled to brimming with tiny fabulous details in a vast cityscape. It's probably one of the reasons I love books like, "Who Needs Donuts?" by Mark Stamaty or James Warhola's, "Uncle Andy's" so much. Usually books of this nature are very precise. They hide delicate little intricacies on each and every page, just waiting for the viewer to find them. Yet I've never read a picture book that contains such remarkably colorful embellishments as I have in Arthur Dorros' 1991 treasure, "Abuela". Taking a standard fantasy of wishing to fly, author Dorros and illustrator Elisa Kleven have given us a remarkable journey above a world too complex to capture in a single book. To read this book is to experience something beautiful. Rosalba is quite close to her Grandmother or "Abuela" as she is called in Spanish. The two often go on enjoyable trips around and about town, just for the heck of it. On this particular day, the woman and the girl go to the park (Central Park, by the look of it) to feed the birds. It's there that Rosalba begins to speculate a little. What if the birds picked her up and started flying away with her? What if her Abuela simply leapt into the sky and flew too? The birds gone, the two could soar above factories, trains, people, and workers. What follows is a story in which Rosalba describes the path the two could take while skimming across the sky. They wave to the people and visit the Statue of Liberty. They race the sailboats, hitch a ride with an airplane, and hug on a cloud. In the end, the two are back in the park and they decide to go on another adventure in a boat. "Vamos" Abuela says, and she takes her granddaughter's hand.

In the book "Abuela" by Arthur Dorros, readers meet a young girl named Rosalba whose vivid imagination take her and her grandmother on an animated adventure throughout the city. Rosalba and her Abuela share a love for each other and their love of imagination. The creative two ladies take young readers on a journey with the help of vibrant and colorful imagery. On a trip to the park Rosalba wonders what would happen if she could fly like the birds, readers soon leap into the sky and begin flying all over the city. When flying over the city, readers see the diversity of the people waiting for the bus, they sail with the nearby ships, watch people unload the ships, see them unload items that her Abuela grew up with, they fly over the Statue of Liberty, and fly with the airplanes. At the very end Rosalba visits some family members and then ends up back where she started, at the park. As Rosalba and her Abuela walk by the lake in the park, her Abuela decides to go on a boat ride, and yet again another adventure begins. I believe the book "Abuela" is an amazing book to promote in the classroom because multiculturalism is shown throughout the book. One way multiculturalism is shown is that there are not just white kids. Even though it is a Hispanic based book, you see all types of different skin tones throughout the book. This way everybody is included in the story while learning about a culture that is different from their own. Another way multiculturalism is shown is that there is a mix between the English and Spanish language. Both languages are shown in the book and in the back there is a glossary of the Spanish words spoken. The glossary also shows how to pronounce a word if a reader is not familiar with it.
