Customer Reviews

Ok, I have been working my way through all of the available DW Ulsterman books for a while now. Started with the Second Oldest Profession, which was very good, and that led to the Bennington series, also very good, and then I decided to jump over to the "Mac Walker" books, which seem to be very popular and were written before the Bennington books. Like I said in another review, I'm not what I would call a very "political" type person, and there is definitely a political message to the Mac Walker books including Tumultus. The thing is though that the story itself goes way beyond politics and both Dominatus, which takes place right before Tumultus, and then Tumultus taken together make for an epic story that just drew me into the characters and the events, and a race against the clock. Tumultus takes place over several locations while Dominatus was just about that one place in Alaska. There's more characters, some very creepy monsters, including one of the creepiest villains I've read about in a long time called the "Great Consulate", and of course, Mac Walker himself who has become for me maybe my #1 character of this genre of story. DW Ulsterman has made a man who is not perfect, and that makes him even more likeable and interesting, and yes, brave. I also really liked the character of the "Russian" and the cowboy Cooper Wyse. Oh, and then there is Brando the Doberman. I won't give a spoiler away but Brando is just great and plays as important a role in the story as the human characters.
