Synopsis

With the repairs to his dingy one-bedroom apartment completed, Maou needs a new TV, so...the Devil's going digital! The trouble is, Maou and Ashiya don't know the first thing about flat-screens, so they bring Emi's friend Rika along with them to the local big-box electronics outlet. Customer Reviews

The beach vacation from the last book is over. The Devil King, his two remaining followers, their arch enemy and her support, and the high school girl who is caught up in this whole mess are now back in the city. Sadly, they barely get a day's rest before something else decides to come along and smack them square in the face. Maou, Ashiya, Urushihara, and Suzuno have returned to their rebuilt apartment building, with Emi and Chiho in tow. We get a funny scene of poor Maou and Ashiya trying to move some heavy furniture back into their apartment, with Urushihara guiding them so they don't bump into anything. Fed up with waiting for them to clear the way, Suzuno busts out her Holy Force and what follows is basically a bunch of heavy objects--washing machine, fridge, boxes full of stuff--seemingly floating up the stairs to the two apartments. They're not actually floating, but Suzuno is so short that she can't be seen over the stuff she's carrying. It's classic goofball humor that this series has nailed perfectly as supposed enemies bicker more like longtime friends that bitter rivals bent on killing each other. After everything is unpacked, the gang takes a look around their refurbished room and begins to notice a few small changes. Leaking sinks are fixed, brighter paint on the wall; little things like that. But then, Urushihara--being the tech nerd shut-in that he is--makes a big discovery. The villa has been upgraded with an HDTV hook up. And so, the plot of the newest book gets underway: the Devil and his crew are off to buy a TV! Oh, and Suzuno is coming too, because she wants one also. I'll be honest, about the first third of this book is a bit...slow.
